

READ ALOUD CANADIAN BOOKS GUIDELINES OF USE

With school closings and the shift to online (learning/classrooms), we want to help ensure educators and librarians can confidently bring Canadian stories and literature to students during this challenging time. Many Canadian publishers have received requests from educators and librarians wishing to be able to read part of or all of a book to students who are now at home and share a video of the reading for “online story-time”. To support these educators and librarians, Access Copyright’s participating publishers have generously waived licence fees for the works listed below to be read online to students in K-12 schools and libraries in Canada that are currently paying the Access Copyright Elementary and Secondary School Tariff, 2010-2015 or is otherwise licensed with Access Copyright for non-commercial purposes only. We ask that you follow these guidelines when doing so:

- 1) At the beginning of the reading, please credit the author, illustrator and publisher. State that you are presenting your reading “with permission from Access Copyright on behalf of the Publisher”. Separate permission from the Publisher is not required.
- 2) Post your reading through your school’s password-protected platform or within a closed group or password-protected platform. If this is not possible, uploading to YouTube is permitted if videos are marked “Unlisted.”
- 3) Delete your reading or, if your platform does not permit deletion, disable access to the reading by no later than December 31, 2020. We will assess the need to extend this licence on that date.
- 4) The reading may not be retained as an archive or saved beyond December 31, 2020.
- 5) By posting a reading, you agree to abide by the above terms.

Please note that Access Copyright will continuously update the list of available works as publishers opt-in to the Read Aloud Canadian Books Program.

Thank you for all the work you do. Please tag Access Copyright (@AccessCopyright) and the Association of Canadian Publishers (@CdnPublishers) in any Instagram, Twitter or Facebook posts affiliated with your readings so we can see your efforts in action.
